About Us

The Zelia Stephens Early Childhood Center (ZSECC) at Alabama State University is located on Robert C. Hatch and Tuscaloosa Streets, directly behind the University President's House. The Center is named for Zelia Stephens (Evans), a professor in early childhood education, who served the University for 22 years as teacher, department head, and the first director of the Center. Our 15,000 square-foot facility includes classrooms for children and an observation deck located on the upper level, allowing observation of the children through a one-way glass. The structure is designed to have laboratory facilities for teacher training in early childhood education and other university students. In addition, the facility includes: wellness room, laundry room, multi-purpose room, conference room, faculty and staff lounge, administrative offices, media center, computer lab, and a fully equipped cafeteria.
